SOCIAL DEMOCRACY IN GERMANY.

The interest of the congress of the German Social Democratic party, which was in session at Lubeck during the past week, centered about the persons of Edward Bernstein and August Bebel—the representatives respectively of the new school and the old school of Socialism. Although the veteran parliamentarian, who is still the recognized leader of the party, overcame the younger man by his eloquence, the numerical strength of the partisans of the interest in the congress cannot fail to cause surprise in view of what Bernstein stands for. He is flatly opposed to the theories of Karl Marx and has labored industrially with pen and tongue to expose the fallacles of that writer's chief work, "Das Kapital," which has been the Socialist's Bible, so to speak.

Herr Bernstein has denounced as a fiction the assertion of the inevitable tendency of wealth and the instruments of production to concentrate in a constantly diminishing numproduction to concentrate in the death of Garfield.
